What happens to ILF payments if you die

This leaflet explains what the ILF needs to know if you die

The ILF hope that giving you a leaflet explaining what needs to be done, it will prevent an overpayment being made

What needs to be done if you die?

The ILF have produced this leaflet to help your friends or family sort things out if you die. You might think it is a bit strange to have a leaflet about this, but we have found that it is helpful for friends and family to know what to do if it happens.

When somebody dies, it is obviously a very difficult time for everybody who knew the person. There is a lot to do and sort out. However, it is very important that somebody does call the ILF as soon as possible to let us know. Our staff are trained to be sensitive and offer as much help as possible with ILF payments.

What happens to ILF payments if you die?

If you are getting payments from the ILF when you die, somebody must cancel your payments. This is because there will be no further need to employ personal assistants (PAs) to support you in your own home.

We cannot transfer your payments to somebody else. If you die, nobody else can use your payments, even if they live in the same house and need to employ a PA for themselves. If they would like to receive money from the ILF, they must apply to the ILF separately.

What the ILF needs to know

You must arrange for somebody to let the ILF know if you die. This could be a friend, a member of your family or your representative if you have one.

They will need to tell us -

- The date you died
- Whether you were in hospital or residential care or at home when you died
- Who is dealing with your affairs

Don't get into debt

If somebody does not contact us straight away to tell us you have died it may lead to an overpayment. An overpayment means the ILF have paid money you should not have had and this money will have to be paid back.

Please make sure that the person who will deal with your affairs reads this leaflet. The ILF must be told as soon as possible that one of our users has died.
